Presentation

The “Discussion seminar on social codesign in the fields of education and health” aims to visualize, map and create opportunities in the context of the different social, cultural and economic sectors in the face of the main challenges of the future.

Public institutions need to adapt, update and grow, know how to use resources and people in order to lead a renewal of services, find solutions to complex problems based on more inclusive and participatory projects.

The seminar focuses on two of the tracks of the Master's degree final project:

- Educational track: The fields of education and culture are key for generating synergies to improve the achievement of knowledge and content and to provide tools for involvement to solve conflicts, tensions and balance interests between the various agents that may affect an entity, community and cluster.
- Health track: The welfare sector, including both healthcare and public health, have been spaces for experimentation for the codesign and design of services since the beginning. The sector faces the challenges of approaching all audiences, from the most complex such as children or the elderly, to caring for vulnerable and interdependent people, considering the diverse needs in each of these processes.

The subject invites the student to reflect through a series of cases and experiences from the different phases of the design project and working on the analysis and reflection on some of the cases, situations and contexts described in class and established with the collaborating entities and organizations.
